WHY

The climate crisis is an existential threat. Children are already suffering in many ways, and their future is in jeopardy. 2021 is a critical year to start the worldwide transformation to a more sustainable and healthier way of life. Governments, civil society and individuals urgently must take action to preserve children's future. And children must have their say.

Join CAP-2030 to:

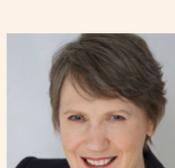

- Discuss the impacts of the climate crisis on child health and what urgently needs to be done.
- Ask your questions to a panel of leading experts from all over the world who are speaking out and driving action with evidence, leadership and commitment.
- Learn about a new initiative, CAP-2030, that was born out of a World Health Organization-UNICEF-Lancet Commission, A future for the world's children?
- Discover the nine countries where CAP-2030 will support innovative work for children.
- View the world premiere of a documentary film on the new threats to children's health.
